PARENTS' SPEAK

How to reduce screen time for kids

In today's digital age, it's increasingly challenging for parents to limit their child's exposure to screen. With smartphones, tablets, and TVs readily available, it's crucial to establish healthy screen-time habits from an early age. Here are some practical tips to help parents reduce screen time for kids under 5 years.

- Create a Screen-Free Zone: Designate certain areas of your home, such as the dining room or bedrooms, as screen-free zones. This helps reinforce the idea that screens are not part of every aspect of life.
- Lead by Example: Children learn by observing their parents. Be a positive role model by engaging in non-screen activities, like reading, playing, or going for a walk.
- Provide Alternatives: Offer a variety of engaging and age-appropriate activities as outdoor play, arts and crafts, puzzles, and interactive toys that stimulate creativity and physical activity.
- Plan Playdates: Organize playdates with other children to promote social interaction and imaginative play. Interacting with peers can be a powerful motivator for kids to put away screens.
- Monitor Content: Be vigilant about the content your child consumes. Use parental controls and filters to ensure that they are exposed only to age-appropriate and safe material.
- Encourage Outdoor Play: Outdoor play offers numerous physical and mental benefits. Encourage your child to explore nature, play in the park, or engage in sports and physical activities.

Remember that every child is unique, and what works for one may not work for another. Be patient and flexible in your approach, and make adjustments as needed.
